I have many objectives and ambitions in my life. One included becoming a certified nurse since, nursing was a natural choice. As a result, in my undergraduate and I decided to focus on Nursing where after undergoing through my attachment program as a certified nurse, I found out my true calling to become a family practitioner. Therefore, this remains one of my major objectives which I target to achieve. This will give me a chance to develop my career and achieve my short-term goals and more importantly provide me with an opportunity to become a family nurse practitioner.

Various experiences are driving to me towards the career of Family Nurse Practitioner. In my childhood, I lost my father who died from a chronic illness. I always spent a lot of time in the hospital sitting next to him and wishing that he could get well and get back home but unfortunately he died. While in the hospital, I spend quality time interacting with the nurses who friendly and always treated my father in very emphatic manner. I felt that I had lost my father just because of lack of emphasis on health promotion or education and I saw this as an obstacle to change. Therefore, one of my reasons for becoming Family Nurse Practitioner is to give other families in the society a chance to live a longer and healthier life.

In that regard, in my short-term goals, I aspire to learn and gain more knowledge about family nursing practices. I also aim to show an exemplary academic and practical performance. I believe that South University being a reputable learning institution, it will give me an opportunity to learn more about this career and even acquire more knowledge and skills that are beyond those required to family nursing practices through its well-qualified mentors and sufficient resources. My long-term plan is to provide healthcare to families that need my service the most. I, therefore, wish to go beyond the responsibilities of a certified nurse and provide the community with utmost care and my focus will not only be on their health needs but also on their personal needs.

My dream of becoming a family nurse practitioner is also supported by the urge to deal with various disparities experienced in the healthcare sector which makes me feel the right of people's access to the healthcare has been violated. More especially, when I relate my father's case, I feel that the old have limited access to the hospital due to poor programs and initiatives in health (Wright, 2017). This also remains one of the reasons which push me to specialize in family nurse practitioner. Hence, this profession will give me an opportunity to get more knowledge in various fields like pediatrics and internal medicine. With knowledge, I will be able to serve the society without any discrimination. I, therefore, plan to become a gerontologic nurse practitioner, and I believe being in South University, I will get an opportunity to acquire relevant skills and knowledge which will enable me to provide healthcare services for the older generation.

Therefore, I believe that family nurse practitioner program will enable me to bridge the gap between patients and the healthcare provider (Nguyen, 2016). I also aim to embrace various values in my profession like compassion, strength, and advocacy and I also intend to focus in primary care and prevention in order to improve the overall health of people in the community.
